Diamond Spectacles.

THESE SPECTACLES are manufactured from "MINUTE CRYSTAL PEBILES" melted together, and are called Diamond on account of their hardness and brilliancy. It is well known that spectacles cut from Brazilian or Scotch pebbles are very injurious to the eye, because of their polarizing light. Having been tested with the polariscope, the diamond lenses have been found to admit fifteen per cent. less heated rays than any other pebble. They are ground with great scientific accuracy, are free from chromatic abberations, and produce a brightness and distinctness of vision not before attained in spectacles.
Manufactured by the Spencer Optical Manufacturing Comp New York. For sale by responsible agents in every city in the Union. H. A. HEATH & CO., Jewelers and Opticians, are sole Agents for Newport, R. I.,—from whom they can only be obtained. No peddlers employed. Do not buy any tube without the trade mark on the inside of the lens you see.

Drawing Him Out.

BY FENT SHIRLEY, IN HEARTH AND HOME.

"So Ann Rafter's been telling you Sybil offered herself to him! That's just like Ann; for raising a big dust off of a clean floor, I never saw her match. The fact is, she hasn't got the rights of the story, nor anywheres near, and I'm the only one as is knowing to 'em, let alone Sybil and Mr. Harlowe, of course. Folks have picked up a little here, and a little there, and piecened it together to suit themselves—I had no notion of helping them, and I wouldn't mention the particulars now to have 'em go. Not that I think Sybil did anything out of the way in drawing of him out, and I can make you understand it clear enough, but land! there's some that won't see straight all you can do; the more light you give 'em the more they squint, and I don't feel anxious to show up our family to such. I haven't the name of being overzealous in feeding the gossip-greedy, you'll bear me out on that, Miss Spriggins; and so'd Judge Davenport; I'll be bound, if I was to ask him. Why, it's seven years come March since I've been keeping house for him; I've summered him and wintered him, and he's never once been the man to say to me: 'Mrs Dix, I'll thank you not to speak of this or that.' He's shrewd, the judge is; he sees tattling ain't my callin'.

"Sybil was a spindlin' young thing going on fifteen, when I first took charge here; no more color in her cheeks than there is in that handkercher, and her eyes as big as saucers. With them long, yellow curls a-flyin', and that pretty, smilin' way of hers, I stand to it, she looked more like a shining angel than a white child. And she was the lovingest little soul, ready to do for everybody, and chock full of sympathy for them as see trouble. Her mother's death fell awful hard on her, they say, but she'd got over the heft of it when I come to work for the judge. Well! I had her in hand, and dosed her with herb teas, and tried to chirk up her sperrits what I could, and 'twa'n't long afore her health gained on it, and she began to step round considerable spry. Then her father sent her off to school for a spell, and after that he put her into music, and she set on the pianner stool till my back fairly ached for her; and she had painting lessons besides, as you might have told by the smutches on the carpets. Seemed as if the judge couldn't rest easy without he was crammin' her with something the whole continual time, and he never was much for her going about with other misses. He's all for learnin', the judge is, but for my part, I believe folks can learn you a sight more'n books can, and you may depend it worritted me to see Sybil growing up so old-fashioned like.

"It was the fall she was eighteen that Frentiss Harlowe spoke for our academy. He brought a good recommend, and from all accounts, I suppose he was rather above the common run as far as schooling goes; that went a good ways with Judge Davenport, and it was mostly his doings giving him the place, for the judge had the say among the trustees. From some words I heard dropped, it turned out that the judge had been a friend to Mr. Harlowe's father, too, and wanted to help the son along on that account. If I hadn't got hold of this, I should have been beat when he took to inviting the young man to dinner Sundays for he's no hand for company, especially since his wife died. But then again he'n't one to do things at the halves, and after engaging the new master maybe he thought he'd oughter show him some notice, to make him popular with other folks. I'd no objections myself to Mr. Harlowe's coming; it didn't put me out any, for the judge always sets a good table, visitors or no visitors, and while my hands are in the water I don't mind washing a few extra dishes; but I did feel ugly for Sybil when I found how hard the young man was to entertain.

He was a clever fellow enough, and had a clear, black eye, and nice, sound lookin' teeth. Most folks called him handsome, though I never could see beauty in a dark complexion, overrun with bile. However, that's neither here nor there; he wa'n't responsible for his looks—not for his features, I would say, they were as the Lord made 'em; as for his complexion I n'u't so sure; I don't know as anybody's justified in carrying' round such a yellow face when there's herbs upon herbs provided for touching up the liver. One thing I'm sensible of, if he'd attend better to his health and let his books alone, he'd have been in a good deal more comfortable frame of mind. But he was young and ambitious, and he'd sit up studyin' till one and two every night—I have this straight from the woman he boarded with—and that way he'd keep himself nervous and unstrung all the time; which, of course, didn't help his manners any when he did come out among folks, for he was terrible shy by nature. I overheard the judge talking to Sybil about it.

"Mr. Harlowe has marked ability," says he, "but he doesn't pass for half he's worth on account of his painful bashfulness. We must draw him out, my dear; we must draw him out!"

"So Sybil set herself right to work a drawin' of him out to please her father, and there's where the mischief begun. I saw it as far back as that, but it wa'n't for me to speak. As I was tellin' you, she had a stent of it, at first, tryin' to entertain him; naturally, it would bother her, not being used to gentlemen anyhow, and he as stiff as a meeting-house steeple; but when she found he was a singer, she got along easier, for she'd play the pianner for him an hour on the stretch, and not be necessitated to talk. Mr. Harlowe's singing was enough to hoist you off your feet. He called his voice beartone, but to my mind it was as smooth a bass as you often come across, and Sybil's chimed in with it complete. Listenin' to 'em I have o'cen'most felt sometimes as if the door was open into heaven, and I had my ear at the crack. The judge said music rested him, and I should think likely it did; leastways, he was sure to doze off while the pianner was going, and you see that left the matter on Sybil's hands, and as I s'd'afore, she'd do her prettiest at drawin' of him out.

"He's so sensitive, Dixie,' she'd say—the child always calls me Dixie—'and so easily embarrassed. I do want to make him feel more at home with us.'

"There never was a kind heartedor soul, and I expect it touched her in a tender spot when she found Mr. Harlowe'd lost his mother the Summer afore, and hadn't a relative nearer than a cousin. I didn't wonder a bit at her being attentive to him, but I was puzzled to know what her father could be thinking of in bringing the young folks together so much. May be it never entered his head that there was any danger in it—some men are just so numb, and he'd always considered Sybil a little girl—or may be he conceited that being as Mr. Harlowe was way down at the foot of the ladder, as you might say, he wouldn't presume to set an eye on his daughter. But a cat may look upon a king, and you and I have lived long enough, Miss Spriggins, to know love'll go where it's sent, and feeling such an interest in Sybil as I do, you may depend I kept on the watch for it.

"Well, pretty soon the young people got up sings round to the houses; this was after they'd heard what a knack the master had at music; and they hung on for Sybil to go to em, because she was a regular witch at reading notes. I was considerable pleased to have her dragged into company more. I thought 'twould be a good thing for her, and liven her up; but by and by, when I noticed how matters were betwixt her and young Harlowe, I grew kind o' fidgetty. She acted no different: she'd always been sort of motherly towards him, but somehow he changed. From being put to it for words, he began to be quite social and budge with her and now and then he'd see her home of an evening. For awhile I laid this to his getting better acquainted, and losing his diffidency; but it flustered me to have him go with her more'n the other girls, for I was jealous it would make talk, as sure enough it did, for the next thing the story was all over town that he was keeping company with her.

"I was curious to see how the judge would take it to have folks give away his daughter to a strugglin' young school master without a cent to his name. I was pretty sure 'twould nettle him, for he's one that feels his consequence; but for all I was dying to tell him the gossip, I couldn't open my mouth to do it; he isn't a person you're real free with. 'T'wa'n't my place to interfere either, still, I calculated it wouldn't hurt anybody for me to give Sybil an inkl'n of what was going, on if Mr. Harlowe hadn't made her an offer yet she might stave it off in time. She was such an unsuspectin child. I thought 'twas more'n an even chance she wouldn't guess what was in his mind, and seemed as if I ought to tell her, seein she hadn't my mother to advise her. For I couldn't help pityin' the master if I was to suffer: your dark, glum men are the very ones to take a mitten to heart, and I was terrible anxious that he shouldn't commit himself.

You know what men are, Miss Spriggins; they can stand a woman's not having 'em, and not lose a meal, provided they haven't come forrad themselves; but if they've gone so far as to ask for the woman, and she says she won't have 'em, that galls 'em. So long as nothing's said though, there's no harm done, and I wanted to put Sybil on her guard to keep Mr. Harlowe from speaking. That sounds like an easy thing to do, and you wouldn't believe how it plagued me to come at it. I turned it over and over in my head to pick just the right words, and not hurt Sybil's feelings, and in the midst of it, while I was hangin' back, Ann Rafter dropped in to borrow the quiltin' bars, she said, though I knew that was only an excuse and her real errand was to pump me about "Sybil's beau."

"What beau?" says I, innocent as a lamb.

"Pish! you needn't try to blind me, Mrs. Dix," says she. "the whole village knows that Sybil is engaged to the master."

"It knows more'n I do, then, says I, going on scrubbin' paint with my back to her. I was set and determined she shouldn't get anything out of me, such a newsy woman as she is.

"Oh, now what's the use of fibbing, Mrs. Dix," says she, lookin' as wise as Solomon. "Some folks think it's cunnin' to keep whist about such things, but I never could understand the wit of it, especially when matters have gone so far as they have in this case, and anybody can see with half an eye Sybil's in love, chin deep."

"Sybil in love! She wouldn't as much as look at Mr. Harlowe," I blazed out; and that's where I missed it, in answering Ann at all.

"Wouldn't!" says she, tossing her head; "them as sees her at the sings says she won't look at nobody else when he's there, and she's full of her talk with him."

"Nonsense!" says I. "she's only drawin' of him out, and tryin' to make the shy, liver complected man feel comfortable, and here's all the thanks she gets"

"'Drawin' of him out, is she?' says Ann, laughing. 'She does make the most of him, that's a fact, and she doesn't seem to count it a hardship either.'

"'If you mean by that that she'd have him, Ann, you're mistaken for once,' says I; she wouldn't drink out of the same tumbler with him."

"'Then it's my opinion Sybil Davenport has a great deal to answer for,' says she, snapping her teeth together like a steel trap. "I don't know what you call it, Mrs. Dix, I call it 'colkwetting' when a girl leads a man on to worship the ground she walks on, and then turns the cold shoulder on him."

"Well, we had it out; and pretty sharp words on both sides, for I would'nt hear Sybil put down; but I was bound to stop that sort of talk, so I went straight to the child with it, and advised her to keep her distance with the master, because he was getting too much interested in her for his own good. When I see how it hurt her; I was n'most sorry I'd spoke. Some girls would have been set up at the bare notion of being fallen in love with, but Sybil's conscience riz in a minute. She wilted right down, like a mornin' glory at noon time and fell to cryin' and saying she'd hadn't meant to encourage Mr. Harlowe, and she hadn't suspected he cared for her, and oh dear, what a wicked thing she was!

"I did my best at soothing of her, makin' no bones of it though, that the man would be considerable disappointed at not gittin' her. Still, I told her if she'd only treat him cool enough, I believe he'd take the hint, and slack off with his attentions. She didn't say any more, but I didn't need spectacles to see she was a good deal exercised after that, and didn't enjoy any peace of her life; and pretty soon I noticed Mr. Harlowe didn't call so frequent as he had and when he did drop in he'd act awful blue, and barely passed the time of day. Puttin' this and that together, I ciphered it out that Sybil had bluffed him off, and I laid it to this her being so hot and flustered afore him. For the solemner he was, the more distressed she'd be, till to look at 'em you'd certainly have thought they was both laboring under concern of mind. I'd as soon have had a catching fever in the house as two such long faces, and one day I said as much to Sybil.

"How can I help being miserable, Dixie?' says she, layin' her pretty head on my lap. 'You'd be yourself if you'd made a man so wretched as I've made Mr. Harlowe."

"But he might have pride enough to cover up his feelin's' says I, 'and he oughter had the sense to have knowed aforehand that he couldn't reach so high as Judge Davenport's daughter.'

"And why couldn't he, Dixie?" asks she, and I see the color creepin' to the very roots of her hair. 'Why, isn't he good enough for me? Where'll you find anybody superior to him?'

"I declare, I was pulled, for till that blessed minute I hadn't once suspicioned as it was possible she'd listen to the master; I'd been savin' all my pity for him.

"'I ain't pickingflaws in Mr. Harlowe,' says I, feelin my way. 'So fur's I know he's a likely young man; I never heard a lisp against him; only it's clear as daylight, Sybil, he ain't one of your father's kind, and he'd be loth to have him for a son—that's all I meant.'

"'Everybody calls Mr. Harlowe a man of genius,' says Sybil, hiding her face, 'and papa appreciates genius.'

"'Your father thinks a night of standing, too,' I put in, 'and the master hasn't any to speak of. Taking this into account, I had a notion he'd be opposed to your havin' him.'

"'Mr. Harlowe comes of as high a family as I do,' says she rather touched; 'and as to papa, Dixie, you know he'd never refuse me anything I'd positively set my heart on.'

THE DAY.

Thomas A. Gardner has been appointed postmaster at Kingston and W. H. Pierce at Tiverton Four Corners.

We congratulate the Fall River News on the excellent appearance it makes in its new dress. May it live to wear out a hundred such suits!

The state election in Connecticut occurs today. The two parties are very evenly matched and it is probable that, as in New Hampshire, there will be no election of state officers by the people. The Republicans think they can carry the legislature.

The business men of Boston held a meeting Saturday evening and vigorously denounced inflation. They appealed to the President to veto any bill that was passed by Congress to increase the volume of the currency.

Mr. Butler thinks it is nonsense to talk about a redeemable currency. He says there is as much sense in talking about a redeemable yard stick or a redeemable quart pot. Precisely, Ben, but if a yard stick was made of rubber and sometimes measured twenty inches and sometimes thirty four, and if the quart pot commonly used sometimes held a half pint and sometimes a pint and a half, the gentleman who never speaks without thanking God for something or other would think a change was needed somewhere. Our greenback dollar, that he considers all right, was worth seventy five cents two or three years ago, ninety four cents last Fall and eighty eight cents now. As soon as the $400,000,000 bill was passed that excellent dollar, the poor man's money, fell in value a cent or two.

THE PEOPLE AND THEIR REPRESENTATIVES.

Our General Assembly has not earned the distrust and contempt which the people of many states feel toward their legislatures and yet even here in Rhode Island we half unconsciously draw a sigh of deep content when we realize that our senators have returned to their Sabine farms and that the statute book is to have a few months of rest. It is not that we regard our legislators as corrupt, nor as men of small calibre, but this everlasting meddling with the laws is breeding a sense of weariness and disgust in our own state and in the whole country from Maine to Texas.

The people of Massachusetts are congratulating themselves that the Senatorial contest in their legislature protects the state from much foolish legislation by distracting the attention of the local Solons. Pennsylvania has just adopted a new constitution which takes much power from the legislature, and the same is true of Ohio. Illinois has a session of the legislature only once in two years. The assembling of most of the state legislatures and of Congress itself is looked forward to with forebodings and their adjournments with feelings of relief.

One reason for this state of feeling,—the weariness of change,—has been spoken of. But it is also true that in respect to brain and conscience our legislative bodies have deteriorated. Our Congress of today compared with the Congress of half a century ago presents fewer men of independent thought and large intellectual capacity and more men who have just cunning enough to manipulate political machinery but too little to raise them above the common crowd at the bar, in journalism or in mercantile pursuits.

Probably the main reason why our legislative bodies are regarded with less respect than they once were is that their relation to the people has changed greatly. Originally they were composed of delegates sent by the people to protect the latter's interests against the encroachments of kings and royal governors. At first their power was only advisory or negative. They had to wage a constant war with the executive and therefore they were chosen with great care by people who realized keenly what would be the consequences of electing weak or dishonest men. Even in conservative England time has made changes and though Parliament has more power more than it had a century ago it is doubtful if it possesses as much ability.

The whole system of government is now changed. The executive has lost much of its power and the legislative body has acquired almost unlimited power. A two thirds majority has nothing to fear from the executive and many of our statesmen are too far advanced to consider constitutions as of much account. The result of these changed conditions is that power has debauched our legislators. Our ancestors who were ruled over by a pretty vigorous monarchy felt that in many heads there was all wisdom and all moderation, but we who bask in the sunshine of popular government find that a body of representatives can be as tyrannical as a Charles I, as extravagant as a Louis XIV and as pig headed as a George III.

So far as it is possible to ascertain public opinion the people of this country are opposed to violating the laws of honesty and the constitution of the United States by issuing more paper money. Newspapers, boards of trade and mass meetings all over the country denounce inflation, but with a stolid indifference to public opinion that might have cost an English king his throne our Congress proceeds to vote more irredeemable paper currency and strike out all propositions looking toward specie payments at some future date.

The people will soon find that it is as necessary to limit the power of legislative bodies as that of monarchs. There is a general movement in several states toward abolishing special legislation. This is a step in the right direction. It might also be well to have only biennial sessions and if a fixed proportion, say five eighths,—instead of a bare majority were required for the passage or change of a law it would tend to give our statute books what they greatly need—a little peace.

AN EASTER INCIDENT.

To the Editor of the News.

SIR:—I have a plain statement to make: will put the bald facts before you and leave you and others to form your own opinion of one of the actors in a scene witnessed yesterday, in a prominent church in this city, by a number of persons. Two young ladies, well dressed, well behaved and every way worthy of consideration and respect, entered the sanctuary and asked for seats, to which they were shown, as I understand, by an officer of the church. Soon after a lady entered the same pew, looked surprised, asked them what they were doing there, told them that it was no place for them and to be gone in a voice loud enough to attract attention—turned them out as intruders, as dogs unfit to kneel and pray in the same pew with one so much nearer heaven—in her own estimation. "Two men went up to the temple to pray, the one"—but you know all about that affair, and I will not take more of your time.

STATE MISCELLANY.

It is reported that a lot has been purchased on Charles street, next the railroad, Central Falls, upon which a steam grist mill is to be built. On many accounts it would be a very desirable location, as corn and wheat could be delivered into the bins direct from the cars without cartage or handling.

The new bridge across the Blackstone river at Valley Falls is nearly completed, and travel across it has commenced. It was built by the Phillipsburg Manufacturing Co., of Phillipsburg, N. J., and cost $11,500, the expense of which is to be borne equally by the towns of Lincoln and Cumberland. Its length is one hundred and ninety four feet one side and two hundred and one the other.

There were taken in our river, on Saturday last, at one haul of a seine, 16 bushels of red perch, 1 bushel of salt water perch, 5 bushels of suckers, and 1 bushel of pickerel—23 bushels in all. A wagon load of the fish was sent to Providence, the supply being more than enough for the Pawtucket market. This was probably the greatest quantity of fish ever taken in Pawtucket river at one haul of a seine, unless a greater quantity of menhaden may at some time have been taken.—[Pawtucket Gazette and Chronicle.

EASTER.

SERVICES COMMEMORATIVE OF THE RESURRECTION OF OUR LORD HELD IN THE CATHOLIC, EPISCOPAL, METHODIST AND UNITARIAN CHURCHES.—THE FLORAL DECORATIONS AND MEMORIAL OFFERINGS.

St. Mary's Church.

At St. Mary's church yesterday, there was mass at seven o'clock and a special mass for the St. Mary's Catholic Benevolent Society at nine o'clock. At ten o'clock high mass was celebrated and a sermon was preached by the Rev. Father Grace. The church was not particularly decorated and there were no clergymen from out of town present. The services were well attended.

Zion Church.

There were a large congregation assembled at Zion church yesterday. The floral display, as usual, was tastefully arranged. The large and handsome cross on the altar was the gift of Mr. Fadden the florist who is always most generous in donating flowers to the church. In the rear of the cross on the black walnut paneling was the sentence in white frosted plush "Jesus Christ is risen today." The music was in excellent taste. The Rev. Dr. Mercer assisted in the service and preached the sermon.

The rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, received several tokens of esteem from the congregation, one of which was a handsome morocco wallet filled with bank notes accompanied by a letter from the secretary of the corporation "on behalf of the parishioners as a sincere token of their continued confidence and regard." During the years past the people have been unusually zealous in good works; not only on behalf of their own parish but also for the advancement of the work of missions outside of their own diocese. The weekly services have been better attended and the Lenten audiences were unusually large. The walls of the chapel have recently been beautified by being newly tinted and by the addition of illuminated borders and sentences. The old carpet has given place to a new one in keeping with the chapel. Other minor improvements have been made which reflect credit on rector and people.

Emmanuel Church.

The Easter anniversary of the Sunday school of Emmanuel Church occurred yesterday afternoon and the house was full to overflowing long before the hour of the commencement of the exercises. The services were opened by the singing of the anniversary hymn—"It is good to be here today" followed by the regular Sunday school services. The next piece sung was entitled "Christ arose" and it was rendered in a most beautiful manner. The rector, the Rev. S. C. Hill, then made a most interesting address, appropriate to the occasion, dwelling principally upon the resurrection of Christ.

"Wake the glad strain" was then sung, followed by the presentation of the offerings. The latter was a most interesting exercise. Each class as called was represented by two who went to the altar and delivered their class reports and floral contribution to the rector and officers who stood ready to receive them. The floral offerings were boquets of choice flowers fastened to matched blocks of wood. The latter being attached to each other formed two pillars, over the top of which was placed an arch with the inscription "Resurrection and the Life" in gilt letters. The foundation of each of the pillars was "Jesus."

After everything had been arranged the chancel, which looked like a garden of exotics, was illuminated by a locomotive head light.

The effect was beautiful, and gracefully, in an inclined position, was the offering of one class, a large snow white cross, among the flowers and at each side of the chancel stood an oval frame or arch covered with box and flowers. From the efficient superintendent, Mr. William P. Clarke, we learn that the number of the scholars in the school is 262 with 26 teachers and six officers making a total of 294. The average attendance for the past year has been 156; a falling off from last year. The school however is in a prosperous condition and is doing a great amount of good in bringing under religious influences those who otherwise would spend Sunday in the streets preparing for the reform school. Mrs. Hill presided at the organ and all the music was under her direction. The Sunday School collection of Emmanuel church, yesterday, was $51.89 making a total of $186.98 for the year.

Unitarian Church.

Services appropriate to Easter were held yesterday morning in the Unitarian church. A large audience was present. The pulpit and surroundings were decorated with a profusion of beautiful flowers, arranged by several of the ladies of the society, to whose taste and skill much credit is due. Preceding the sermon two young ladies received the rite of baptism and were admitted to the church, by a form of service now yet simple and very satisfactory and impressive to all the congregation. The Rev. Mr. Kimball preached an Easter sermon on 1 Peter 1:3. At the request of several who heard it the pastor will write out the substance of what was spoken, and we shall print it in tomorrow's issue of the News.

The Unitarian Sunday school enjoyed yesterday afternoon an Easter festival concert. The floral decorations for the occasion, though confined to the immediate vicinity of the pulpit, were very fine. Massed in front of the desk were a profusion of calla lilies, their pure deliency of hue contrasted the bright color of geraniums. Ranged on either side of the platform were a variety of growing flowery treasures: while the gas fixtures were adorned with sprays of green enlivened with smaller spangles of color. A vase upon the organ supported a large and magnificent bouquet, a present to the school from Dr. Baker's little son, celebrating his arrival at the age of eighteen months, and testifying his interest in the glad exercises of the occasion. All this was explained in a little note to the school, written, no doubt, with the aid of an amanuensis. Suspended in the alcove in rear of the pulpit was a shield bordered with green leaves and bearing in the centre a cross of delicate green and white. About the cross were the words:—

One Family we dwell in him:
One Church—above—beneath,—
Though now divided by the stream,
The narrow stream of Death.

The exercises were conducted in accordance with an Easter service, which included reading by the Superintendent, Mr William H. Durfee, with responsive chanting by the school, prayer and carol. And original Easter conversation prepared for the occasion by one of the teachers and rendered by a half dozen young ladies was prominent and there were numerous recitation by children and others with repeating of scripture texts, all having reference to the grand theme of the day.

Each class made a contribution in aid of the Children's Mission in Boston, delegating a member to make the offering with an appropriate text of Scripture.

Lt. Gov. Van Zandt being called upon to address the school, did so very pleasantly, speaking of his interest in the exercises of the children, of his own childhood days, and of the blessedness of the anniversary which the concert celebrated.

First Methodist Episcopal Church.

Easter was appropriately observed in this church. The floral offerings were fitting to the occasion. The pulpit and altar table being decorated with plants and flowers beautifully arranged, and making a fine display. The entire service related to the glorious doctrine of the resurrection of Christ and the lessons of the hour, so fully in harmony with the revealed character of God.

It was also the first sabbath of the conference year and Rev. Wm. F. Whitcher, the newly appointed pastor, entered upon the work of the ministry in our city. The morning was devoted to the service of the holy communion, and Mr. Whitcher's sermon was in the afternoon. He took for his text the words of the angels to the women at the sepulchre—"Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here but is risen" &c.

In entering upon the discussion the speaker remarked that the resurrection was the seal and the confirmation of the life work of Christ. On this is based the hope of the world. Jesus had wrought miracles attesting his divine sonship, but if the grave could hold him in corruption the lessons otherwise drawn from the miracles must be worthless. He had spoken as man never spoke, but if, like other men, he was conquered by death his sublime words must be measured by the same rules and standards as are those of Socrates and Plato. He came into the world to meet for us the enemies of the race. He had met them and conquered. By his resurrection the last enemy, death, had been defeated. But had he continued in Joseph's tomb he would have himself been overcome, and the hope of the world had been lost.

The church today has a living Christ. He is not dead. He has risen and lives among his people, and leads them to battle and to victory. Men make a mistake when they reverence the places where Jesus lived and walked and preached and suffered and died, and forget him or neglect his teachings in the affairs of life. Christ is not dead but alive, and we are to seek the knowledge of him and his will. The crusaders sought to rescue the sepulchre, and cared more for the tomb where he was laid than for his character and presence. All men who rest in dead forms make the same mistake. They seek the living among the dead, and need to be told "He is not here, but is risen." Our hope is in a risen and living Christ. The subject of our worship we do not find in the newly made tomb, but in a risen, ascended, and ever present Lord. He lives in the doctrines of grace in the principles laid down and in the work and service of his disciples.

The sermon was exceedingly able as well as appropriate and we regret that we cannot give a more full and accurate report.

Thames Street Methodist Episcopal Church.

At the Thames street Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday the Rev. S. Leader opened his ministry with a sermon on the resurrection of Christ. His text was Luke XXIV, 5:—"Why seek ye the living among the dead?" There are times when old phrases may be employed with new significance and power and when thus employed, they gather to themselves the enduring elements of immortality. This text is an old form of speech, applied usually to those who were foolishly, impertinently, or absurdly employed. But now it is used by beings not entirely of earth, angels. Are they acquainted with the dialects of earth? Undoubtedly they have been and are interested spectators of and participants in the scenes of the singular history of this planet.

It was meet that they should be at the sepulchre to roll away the stone, to gaze upon the triumphant risen Lord—to tell the wonderful news to the women who came to the sepulchre to witness his triumphal ascension.

The speaker then made the following leading points:—

I. That the Christ of God was, and is a living Christ. Notwithstanding the spear, the crown of thorns, the torture of crucifixion, he was a living Christ. Notwithstanding the sepulchre, the stone, the seal, the Roman guard, he was the living Christ. Notwithstanding the heartless timidity of His followers, and their cruel desertion he was still a living Christ.

These points were ably elaborated upon and applied to the present time in a very lucid and argumentative manner by the speaker.

II. The evidences of his being a living Christ. What did his enemies say, by way of accounting for the disappearance of the body? "His disciples stole the body." The absurdity of this was clearly shown by the speaker. If the guard was awake why did they not prevent the theft? If they were asleep, how did they know? The witnesses, the angels, the women, the two disciples journeying to Emmaus, the eleven disciples, the five hundred, testified to the resurrection before courtiers, rulers, magistrates, kings, in the face of opposition, torture, and death without fee or reward.

III. The comfort we derive from this living truth of a living Christ. He was the first fruits, the waving of the first ripe sheaf, and gives the world the grand assurance by declaration and example that all His followers shall rise again. He storms death's strongest hold; rends asunder the ghastly ceremonies of the tomb; conquers and plants the banner of hope on the citadel of death. He could not be held by death: death had no power over Him, and was obliged to give Him up.

The Rev. Mr. Leader in the evening preached his introductory sermon; he preached from the text, "Brethren, pray for us," in which he exhorted his people to remember him in their prayers that God would endow him with wisdom and judgment in the guardianship of the people whom he had been called to serve. He liked his appointment and considered it one of the best in the conference and was happy in the assurance that he had been received with open arms and welcomed with the smiles and prayers of his future co-workers in the vineyard of the Lord.

Trinity Church.

The interior of this venerable structure presented an appearance yesterday greatly improved by its Lenten renovation. The walls and ceiling have been toned down from the clear white that used to be a little trying to the eyes and are now of a delicate drab with the slightest touch of blue. Around the arches and between pillars obliquely opposite are bands composed of two shades of fawn, a strip of light blue and lines of red. In the angles these bands of color are blossoms and leaves of the trumpet vine. The back of the chancel is painted, above the window sill, a light blue with a narrow gilt moulding. Below the line of the window sill the wall is painted with set figures of dark, rich colors. The general effect of the decorations is excellent. The colors harmonize perfectly with each other and with the building itself. No rich display or striking effects have been aimed at, but the most perfect good taste is manifested throughout.

The floral decorations were abundant and beautiful. The baptismal font and the reading desk were almost hidden by great masses of flowers tastefully arranged. In the chancel were a large number of memorial offerings, several of which came from persons who had suffered bereavement by the awful casualty of the Ville du Havre last November. Among these Easter offerings was a cross and anchor, interwoven, of white flowers; another was a cross of violets; a third, a cross of ivy and white flowers; several were baskets of flowers, and around the sides of the church were arranged beautiful plants in pots.

The exercises began with "I know that my Redeemer liveth," rendered on the organ by Mr. Ullmann. The usual Easter services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. White assisted by the Rev. Mr. Childs. At the conclusion of the morning prayer Dr. White in a few words welcomed his parishioners back to their old church and then made a verbal report of the parish work done since last Easter. During the year services have been held according to the custom of the church on all Sundays and on all the greater feast days and fasts. Twenty one persons were baptised and nine confirmed. The services of Lent were unusually well attended. The Lenten contributions amounted to $88. The chapel debt has been reduced to $1600. Several boxes of clothing, amounting in value to a considerable sum, have been made up and sent to relieve the necessities of missionaries.

Dr. White took for his text the first verse of the ninety-eighth Psalm: "O sing unto the Lord a new song; for he hath done marvellous things; His right hand, and His holy arm, hath gotten Him the victory." This day we celebrate the resurrection of our Lord; His battle and His victory. The battle was foretold in the Old Testament; it was a conflict with the enemies of man; on its fate hung the fate of the human race. His right hand and His holy arm won the victory and vanquished the foes who sought to destroy man. Though apparently weak the strength of God was with Him and though crucified in weakness He was raised in power and accomplished the mission of love and mercy on which He came into the world.

This battle and victory were fought and won for man. The devil would destroy: Christ would redeem: the world would plunder, Christ would enrich: death would retain eternal possession of man, Christ would bestow on him immortal life. Christ lived and died for all. He offers hope to all. Every individual has a share in the blessed resurrection. Every one should have in Christ a dear personal friend.

The resurrection is the proof, not to be gainsaid, that God accepted the services of His Son. It was on His resurrection that Christ rested His claims to divinity. "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up." If He had been an impostor the tomb would have retained possession of Him, but He knew that He was divine and that He would not be suffered to see corruption. He was raised from the dead and His claims for Himself and His gospel were established. The resurrection also proves the truth of all His words. By it the authority of His teachings is confirmed. By it also the reliability of His promises is established. Has He said "Come unto Me and I will give you rest"? We know that it is assuredly so. And mindful of His resurrection and believing His promises we go down to the grave rejoicing in the blest assurance that we also shall rise again. Then shall we see Him face to face and know Him as He is.

No Name.

Many, many people suffer from they know not what. They are not sick—they are not well. There is no name for it. It is simply weakness—a breaking down of the vital forces. Whatever its causes (and they are innumerable), its symptoms are in the main the same. Among the most prominent are extreme lassitude, loss of appetite, loss of flesh, and great mental depression. Indigestion and a stomach cough are also frequently some attendants of this distressing state of body and of mind. The common remark in relation to persons in such a condition is, that they are consumptive. Now, what these unfortunates really want is vigor, vital strength; and as certainly as dawn succeeds darkness, they can recuperate their systems and regain perfect health by resorting to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is as clear that a life-reviving tonic is required in such cases, as that the dying flame of an empty lamp requires to be revived by a new supply of oil. Perfectly pure and innocuous, containing nothing but the most genial vegetable extracts, and combining the three grand elements of a stomachic, an alterative, and a genial invigorant, Hostetter's Bitters are suitable to all constitutions, and are as applicable to the diseases and disabilities of the feebler sex as to those of men. No words can do justice to its marvelous properties. It stands pre-eminent among the health restoring preparations of the age, and every year adds to its fame, not only in this country, but throughout the civilized world.

GENERAL NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Report on the Geneva Award Bill.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5.—The House judiciary committee has sat the final consideration of the Geneva award bill for the 13th instant. The majority of the committee will then insist that the bill shall be reported to the House for immediate consideration. The committee is united upon the proposition that the matter should be definitely settled before the Summer adjournment, and unless it can soon be acted upon by the House, the prospect for finishing it before adjournment is regarded as very slight, since a long and tedious debate seems inevitable in the Senate, no matter what the final bill sent from the House may be.

An Important Convert to the Cause of District Reformation.

Forney's Chronicle, which has heretofore supported the board during the pending investigation, today favors a change of government.

Proposed Modification of the Finance Bill.

The Senate finance committee met yesterday, and some of its members have been in consultation today. No amendments to the pending bill could be agreed upon. It is now expected that it will be left to individual members to offer such amendments as they see fit. Mr. Sherman intends again to offer a section providing for a redemption and retirement, extending the time for the former to 1878, and reducing the amount to be retired to 50 per cent.

The American and British Mixed Claims Commission.

Henry Howard, late agent of Her Majesty's government under the American and British mixed commission, will disburse the money awarded by it to British claimants,—a little less than a million dollars,which sum is to be paid by the United States to the British government by the 56th of next September. The money will be paid by Mr. Howard to the claimants or their legal representatives. The amount thus to be disbursed is included in the estimates of the department of state. The business of the commission was closed to the entire satisfaction of all its members.

FROM NEW YORK.

The Rigors of Tweed's Confinement at Blackwell's Island.

NEW YORK, April 5.—At a meeting of the commissioners of charities yesterday, the report that Tweed had been treated otherwise than as a prisoner at Blackwell's Island received full confirmation. Commissioner Larimber submitted a communication, in which he says that on visiting the upper part of the prison edifice last Monday, "I saw Mr. Tweed coming from the room furnished and occupied by him, through the sewing room of the women, and going to the hospital. Inquiring of Warden Siscombe, I found Tweed has a room on the second floor of the centre building, luxuriously furnished, which he occupies and in which he receives his visitors.

Gross Frauds in the Newark City Government—A Convention of the People Recommended.

The report of the committee of 100, to investigate the management of the city government of Newark, N. J., asserts that gross frauds and irregularities have been committed in giving contracts and in various other ways, and recommends calling a people's convention to secure a new administration of affairs.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Disgraceful Affrays—One Man Killed and a Prominent Citizen Reported Injured Seriously.

TAUNTON, Mass., April 5.—Considerable excitement prevailed this morning, caused by rumors that a man had been shot or stabbed last night, and since died. The facts, as far as can be obtained, are, that while a party of young men were in a saloon on Weir street, about eleven o'clock last night, all being more or less in liquor, they began bragging, threatening, etc., to such an extent that the proprietor feared a row and closed his saloon.

Charles A. Gifford was last to pass out, and when he reached the sidewalk was struck a fearful blow by some one, knocking him to the ground. The police were called, and Gifford was taken to the police station, but died before reaching there. It is alleged that either young Martin Hoye or one Thomas Mc Shanly struck the blow. These and several additional parties were arrested and locked up.

Gifford was a nice looking man, a carpenter, employed at the Mason machine works, about thirty six years old, and leaves a wife and child. A post mortem examination was held this noon by Drs. Presby and Bassett, who will report at ten o'clock tomorrow, when the coroner's inquest will be held. It is believed that the bursting of a bloodvessel caused death.

Four Men and Two Ladies Precipitated Six Hundred Feet Without Serious Injury.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 5.—Mons. Barbier's balloon "Les Ecours," made an ascension yesterday afternoon from Woodward's gardens. When nearly over the town of San Leandro, 600 feet in the air, the balloon collapsed, sunk and struck the ground with great force. The car containing four men and two ladies dragged about 800 yards. No lives were lost. All were injured more or less but none seriously. The party, excepting Barbiers, returned to this city last night.

CHARLES SUMNER.

I have been reading the many eulogies on the late Charles Sumner, and feel that though much has been said in his favor he is worthy of it all. Among the good things spoken is a sermon by the Rev. Daniel Steele, D. D., and published in Zion's Herald. The following extract, near the close, after the highest praise had been spoken, is a view from the evangelical standpoint and I request its publication in the NEWS. S. T.

Of the religious principles of Senator Sumner I know nothing, more than that he was an attendant upon King's Chapel, as was his father before him. It is probable that he acquiesced in that waning system of Unitarianism,now styled "Liberal Christianity."—It finds its best exemplification in the life and death of Sumner. It intensifies the ethical, and chills and represses the religious nature. Vicious men it cannot recover; with the masses it is powerless. The few who have naturally a high moral endowment it may keep from lapsing into immoralities, and may build up into strength. But such are moral monstrosities; their moral natures tower up like domes of the Yosemite, bold and bare, sublime and unlovely. Evangelical Christianity builds the moral nature up to such hights, but covers them with evergreens that soften their sternness, and crowns them with flowers exhaling perpetual sweetness. There was a moral sublimity in the self-forgetfulness of the great Senator amid the agonizing tortures which convulsed his bosom, and the recollection of his unfinished life-work, the making all American citizens, irrespective of color, equal before the law. "Take care of my civil rights bill". human rights first and last; the ruling passion strong in death. It was sublime. It would have been more sublime if, in addition, the motto of Jesus,the resurrection and the life, had been uttered as the foundation of his hopes for the future—far more sublime if the swan-song of Christian triumph had rung out its music in the stillness of that dying chamber; "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith: and henceforth," etc.

The henceforth of this incorruptible statesman I will not divine: I am not his judge. All that I see is the patent fact that he has left this poor world better than he found it. But while I utter these words, there sounds in my ears those other words which cut off the hope of heaven from all mere philanthropists: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love (toward God in Christ Jesus, as well as toward men), I am become as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal; and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned (in martyrdom), and have not love, it profiteth me nothing."

There with God no acceptable substitute for the absence of love towards His only Son, our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep—love shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost—love as a well of water within, springing up to eternal life, even though listening senates may have bowed before our eloquence, and honey iniquities have vanished before our breath, and unfettered millions make pilgrimage to scatter flowers upon our graves. Christianity is more than a perfect system of ethics; it is personal love toward a personal Saviour, enabling the soul to meet death, not with the stoicism of a philosopher but with the believer's psean of victory on his lips.

"O Love, thou bottomless abyss!
My sins are swallowed up in Thee;
Covered is my unrighteousness,
Nor spot of guilt remains on me,
While Jesus' blood, through earth and skies,
Mercy, free, boundless mercy cries."

Any violations of the above provisions may be punished as provided for in chapter 497 of laws of 1862.

Newport Daily News.

MONDAY, APRIL, 6, 1874.

"I sat a-smoothing her curls, not opening my breath for upwards of a minute, then I says;

"'So the master has spoke, Sybil?'

"She shook her head, and what I c'd see of her face was red as a cochinele dye.

"'No,' says she, 'he's too proud to do it, I'm sure he would if he dared, but he thinks papa is aristocratic; and besides, I've been distant towards him. I wish you hadn't told me to be Dixie.'

"'But I calculated you didn't care anything about him, child,' says I.

"'I didn't then, till I began to pity him,' says she, wipin' her sweet blue eyes on my apron; 'but now oh Dixie dear, I'm so unhappy.'

"'There, there, precious!' says I, 'don't fret. It'll all come right; mark my words.'

"But between you and me, I didn't feel so certain of it; and as time went on, and Sybil didn't seem to get the better of her feelin's, I wouldn't have begretched considerable, poor as I am, if I could have put her back where she was afore she set eyes on Mr. Harlowe, tho' what to do I didn't know.

"My Tom was staying with me at the judge's that fall, goin' to the academy, and choring round night and morning for his board. It was a noble chance for him, specially as the master considered him, and let him ring the bell for his schoolin'. Well, if my memory preserves me, it was about a month after this that word come to Tom not to open the academy, because the master was sick, and there wouldn't be any school. Sybil, she was terrible up in arms over it, and went round all day like a scart rabbit, and the next morning it was worse yet, for Mr. Harlowe wasn't no better, and the widow woman he boarded with gave it is her opinion that half that ailed him was his mind. He didn't seem to suffer much; she s'd, but his strength and ambition had flaxed out all of a sudden.

Sybil drank it in for gospel truth, and I do believe she felt she'd had a hand in his sickness, as may be she had, though I couldn't quite swallow the idea myself. It didn't sound no ways reasonable to me that trouble could sicken a man without his liver's settin' in to back it. I've had some experience. I've buried two husbands, and seen on in hot water time and agin, but I never knew anybody so easy upset as that. So for all I worritted over Mr. Harlowe's disappointment, I had more real concern for his dyspepsy and I said to myself he should have a bottle of my dandelion bitters just as soon as I could whisk the noon dishes out of the way. If he actually was pining for Sybil, I was the one to go, for if he wanted her, and she wanted him, and the judge wouldn't raise any objections to their havin' each other, it did seem as if I had a duty to perform in bringin' 'em together, provided a word would do it. I hadn't taken a great shine to the master myself, but Sybil had, and that was enough.

"After dinner, then, I clapped on my black Lyonoise, and slyed out at the kitchen door, and over to the widow Samson's—unbeknowenst to Sybil, mind you, though there are those like Ann Rafter that'll say she sent me. I found the master settin' up and dressed, but a dejecteder-looking man I never shook hands with.

"'Glad to see you, Mrs. Dix,' says he brightening a little, when I went in.

"'Sorry you're makin' a sick of it,' says I, reachin' out my bitters; 'but I've brought you something here, that if you'll persevere in, will set you on your feet. I've faith to believe.'

"'You're very kind, very kind, indeed,' says he smilin', though I saw the shade settlin' over his face again, as if he'd looked for moren' he got.

"'It's hard on you to be upset so in the middle of your school, that's a fact, says I, watching him close, 'and I a'n't the only one at our house that feels for you.'

"'Ah,' says he, quick as that, his eyes shinin.'

"'Yes,' says I, still watching of him, 'Tom thinks there's nobody like the master, and he can't bear to hear of your bein' laid up.'

"'Tom? Oh yes, Tom,' say he, his face clouding over again. 'To be sure, Tom does live with you. A fine boy, Tom is. Then he really cares about me? Well, I ought to be thankful for that.'

"He didn't seem over and above thankful, though, I'm free to confess. His mind was on Sybil, I was satisfied, and now was my time to speak.

"'I shouldn't be surprised if there's somebody else there that cares about you,' says I, 'and that's Sybil, but being a young woman, so of course it wouldn't do for her to come and cheer you up, as I think likely she'd be glad to.'

"'Miss Davenport is kind to the sick, I've often heard,' says he, leaning forrud as if he'd got to meet my answer half way, whether or no. "Do you mean, Mrs. Dix, that is—you can't mean that she feels any especial kindness for me?'

"'In my day 'twas customary for the young men to put such questions to the girls themselves,' says I laughin'; 'I've nothin' more to say, only that Sybil is rit knowin' to my comin' here.'

"With that I took myself off, but I tell you, Miss Spriggins, I never shut my eyes for the night. Whether I had done well or ill I couldn't contrive; all I could do was to wait and see what would come of it.

"Twa'n't very long I was kept on tenter hooks. The next day but one Mr. Harlowe was out—if it was the bitters I must say they acted like a charm—and afore a week matters was out and dried between him and Sybil, and if you'll believe it, her father was as pleased as anybody. It goes to prove how long-sighted the judge is, I say, that he saw so much in the master. I'm sure I hadn't the least idea, myself then, that he'd turn out such a stirrin' lawyer as he has. But one thing I know, and I'll stand to it, he'd never have got Sybil in the world, if it hadn't have been for our drawin' of him out."

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA-WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup rloens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea-weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food, and prevents souring. It assists the digestion, by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

Dr. Schenck can be consulted at the Quincy House, Boston, on Wednesday, March 25th, April 8th and 22nd, May 13th and 27th.

Advice will be given free, but for a thorough examination with the Respirometer, the charge is $5.00.

Schenck's Medicines are sold by all Druggists throughout the country.

Schenck's Almanac can be had of all Druggists free. mar11-eod

PATENT

PARABOLA SPECTACLES.

Constructed in Accordance with the Philosophy of Nature.

ADMIRABLY ADAPTED TO THE ORGAN OF SIGHT, AND AFFORDING ALTOGETHER THE BEST ARTIFICIAL

Help to the Human Vision.

The Parabola Glasses can be used for the greatest length of time, either by day or night, with perfect ease, (when selected to suit the state of the eye,) and never cause that giddiness of the head, or unpleasant sensation to the eyes that in any experience from using the common kind, but tend to strengthen and improve the sight.

[From the Rev. Thomas Fuller, Norwich Conn.]
Having need a pair of the Parabola Spectacles, I am fully persuaded of their superiority over every other kind, and am confident that the best recommendations are impartial trials. THOMAS FOTTER.

[From the Hon. Isaac Hill, late Governor of New Hampshire.]
I have used the Parabola Spectacles for the last three years; and with, eyes permanent," injured by severe catarrh for more than forty years, I find them unsurpassed, especially in night reading. ISAAC HILL.

[From M. G. Kerr, M. D., Northdown, Pa.]
I do most willingly bear my testimony in favor of the superiority of the Patent Parabola over all other kinds of Spectacles. They are constructed upon the best established and understood principles of Optics, and their adaptation to the human Eye in the different conditions of vision is so perfect as to render sight easy without effort. In my opinion, none others should be used, since the Eyes once used to those do not seem to grow old, and by having a focus at any point of the surface they appear to restore the eyes to their youthful energy. M. G. KERR, M. D.

[From Isaac Heister, M. D., Reading, Pa.]
I have for several years worn the Patent Parabola Spectacles, and have found them decidedly superior to the Spectacle glasses heretofore in use.
ISAAC HEISTER, M. D.

☞ Should the focus of these Glasses, after making trial of them, be found not adapted to the sight, purchasers are particularly requested to have them changed until suited.
